Pursuant to a congressional request, GAO reviewed how the Aerospace Corporation used a 15.5-million contract fee provided by the Air Force in fiscal year 1993 to operate a federally funded research and development center (FFRDC), focusing on the regulatory requirements governing the determination and use of this fee. GAO found that: (1) Aerospace spent 11.5 million, or 74 percent, of its 15.5-million fee for research; (2) Aerospace spent the remaining 4 million for capital equipment purchases, real and leasehold property improvements, and unreimbursed expenses; (3) even though the Air Force and Aerospace discuss Aerospace's specific fee needs and intended use as a basis for fee award, the contract contains the total fee amount; (4) once the Air Force awards the fee, Aerospace exercises some discretion over how to spend it and other sources of corporate funds, such as interest income and fee from other contracts; (5) the manner in which Aerospace spends its corporate funds in a given year can affect how much Air Force fee is needed in the following year; (6) in May 1995, the Department...
