That the larger embryo starves the smaller is a very natural explanation; this is a factor which is very certain to be involved, but it is also possible that the excretions of one embryo tend to inhibit the development of the others. In ferns having large vigorous gametophytes with many archegonia, if the aborted embryos are not too quickly starved they should be subject to recall experimentally, by any measures which would tend to prevent this embryonic competition. From a careful examination of a number of species of leptosporangiate ferns, it is clear that there is a considerable period of enlargement of the egg following fertilization, before the zygote divides. It is obvious that the decisive part of the embryonic selection may transpire during this early period, so that most if not all of the zygotes are eliminated before they have undergone cleavage. A few examples may be given showing the amount of increase in volume during the first stages of the embryogeny, calculated Fig. 25. --Fern gametophyte with several embryos in competition, representing slightly later stage than fig. 24; A is es enlarged; B is c, (second unicellular embryo) with disintegrating nucleus, collapsing as it is aborted through embryonic competition; e, appears to be a third collapsed unicellular embryo (); A and BX200, CX42. from micrometer measurements. The average of several fertilized eggs in Osmunda cinnamomca measured 6000 cubic microns, while the zygote of the same species after only one cleavage...
