He crossed with I lhat-aina and went on to the west. He came to the mountain at night, went up to the sweat-house, looked in, and saw the girl of whom he had dreamt. Many other people were there also. She sat on the east side. Flint Boy came in and sat down beside her. All looked at him, her father and mother looked, and said, Who is thatf Flint Boy had left I lhat-aina outside, had tied him to the acorn sacks. Her father said, Where did that man come from? The girl said that she did not know. It looks as if you were married, said her father, and he gave her a black-bear skin for Flint Boy to sit on. Flint Boy had told I lhat-aina not to bark or bite any one. I am going to marry the girl. When I have done so, I shall get up early to hunt, and I shall tell her to take care of you. Early in the morning Flint Boy got up and told his wife about the dog, told her that it was vicious and that she must not touch it or talk to it. In that case it would not bite her. She agreed to care for it. Flint Boy went away. The woman went out and saw the dog. She patted it, saying, Nice dog. The dog shook its head and tail, and said, Where is my...
