Excerpt: . . . second, with the purification of the Christian Church at the time of the Reformation. They are thus intimately connected with the religious history of the Christian world, whilst they have peculiar claims upon the Farres Essay. f Works, vol. ii. , p. 430. Protestant portion of it, from being, as it were, the children whom it separated from their original parents, with the view of bringing them up to more profitable purposes than those which they were otherwise destined to fulfil. It has been already seen how the suppression of the religious houses entailed extreme distress upon the indigent sick, whilst it has been said that the evils naturally arising out of such a state of things were, in the end, the cause of its amendment. The citizens of London, famed in all ages for their munificent charities, were the first to represent to the state authorities the deplorable condition of the sick poor, now deprived of asylums for their sustentation; and they proposed to the Crown that some of the monasteries, then vacant, should be allowed to be put once more to the better part of their former uses, by affording a home to the friendless. In the year 1538, . e. between the date of the Act for the suppression of the leessr monasteries (27th Henry VIII. , cap. 28), and the last act of dissolution in this reign (37th Henry VIII. , cap. 4.), a petition was presented to the...
