It is well known that a howling mob is often made up of individually sane men. Man in his collective capacity is more easily moved by an appeal to his good or his evil impulses than when alone. While it is true that we have no guide for the future but the experience of the past and that men have remained substantially unchanged within the historic period, the same conditions are never exactly duplicated and conduct must be constantly readjusted to new circumstances as they arise. If, therefore, it is wisely regulated it requires careful thought. There are, however, certain fundamental rules of action that are as invariable in their operation and effects as any law of nature, and the fundamental problem of scientific pedagogy is how to stimulate the selfhood or the self-activity of the individual so that he will always shape his course in conformity to these laws. It is the business of the sociologist and the psychologist to investigate, to define and to formulate the forces, both external and internal, that make one people or one age different from another; that of the educationist to put into operation the agencies that will bring about the results he wishes to produce. It is to be feared that herein will be found the chief shortcoming of the great body of teachers. They regard each subject that enters into the curriculum as an end in itself, whereas it ought to be subsidiary to the remoter object of...
